Why I Designed This Book

I grew up having been taught to read with the traditional recognition reading method. Therefore, as with millions of others, I learned to be a motor reader. That is, I had the inveterate habit of pronouncing each word mentally.

I read very slowly and methodically. Thoughts drifted in, my mind wandered, and I was less than a good reader. I found reading to bring a sense of failure and inadequacy. It was not until I was an adult, that I even heard of sight-reading. Sight-reading is simply comprehending the text, without pronouncing the words. Sight-reading produces faster reading and greater comprehension, as the mind does not tender to wander.

After reading about the sight-reading method, I became determined to design a method of teaching the phonics, while simultaneously teaching sight-reading. That is, without encumbering a child with motor reading. After years of attempting to design such a method, the result is this book.

Traditionally children have been taught the phonics, and immediately thereafter were taught oral reading. We all took our turns reading out loud in class in the first grade. This develops the habit of mentally pronouncing each word.

Example:

I/see/a/dog.

With sight-reading the reader grasp the text, without sub-vocalizing the words. This also allows the reader to grasp sentences in phrases, as opposed to one word at a time.

Example:

I see/a dog.

The child learns reading not by decoding each word phonetically, but by visually grasping the text in a nonverbal process, therefore, it is called sight-reading.

How Use This Book

First the student is taught the alphabet, and then the capital letters. This is the first phase of the program. After the alphabet has been taught, proceed to the phonics phase of the program.

You will note in Lesson 1, there is a group of words, which represent the a sound. Pronounce the word, then have the student write the word. The student may write the word repeatedly, or write the word group multiple times, until the student can verbally identify the words. Linguist have long told us that reading and writing should be learned smyltaneously. As opposed to being learning separately. Moreover teaching the phonics per writing is a multiple sensory method. Scientist tell us that our brain produces a chemical, which aides memory, when multipe senses are employed simultaneously.

After the student has completed lesson 1, begin with the reading program, which is in the second section of this book. This will train the student's brain to comprehend the text by sight.

As you will note in the sight-reading section, there is a sentence, which is repeated multiple times on each page. On each page a sentence is italicized. The child must skim the page, and identify the italicized sentence. Then proceed to the next page. There is no need to verbally identify the sentence, or point to it. As the goal is sight-reading practice. This must be practiced daily until the phonics program is completed, and should even continue then.

The student should be taught at his or her own pace, without pressure or comparison. With the implementation of this program, the child will develop the reading skills of a phonetically proficient reader, and read with speed, and significant comprehension. The world will then become an open book.
